Thomas Taylor – A brief history

Thomas Taylor was a blacksmith who died in 1681. His blacksmith's shop was near to the corner of Church Street and High Street where Taylor's Buildings now stand. In his will he directed that all his property in Dronfield should go to the son and daughter of a kinsman of his in London and then to his brother James. The £4 rent for the property was to be paid yearly to James at the Market Cross in Dronfield. After the deaths of named heirs Thomas Taylor asked that their inheritance should go to the overseers of the poor in Dronfield and their successors. The profits from it were to be used to fit out poor children of the town as apprentices to "any lawful trade or trades in any place or places within the Kingdom of England".

The Thomas Taylor Charity is still administered today for the benefit of young people starting out on their careers in a trade or further studies.
